

MY NEW HOME

Here is a glimpse of where I will be living in Kigali Rwanda...

Well hello,

Yes I've been on school holidays and while I was home for much of my time I have certainly had a busy two weeks with lots of things happening and being organised. The photos above are of my new home in Rwanda. I found it on a page on facebook called expats in Rwanda, where people advertise for all sorts of things. We organised a call on skype and the girl on the lease emailed me after have a few other people interested in the room came and had a look at it and said it was mine should I still want it! So of course I said yes I wanted it and we are now in the process of transferring some money to secure it.

What else has happened in the holidays - oh well after fifteen years and with very mixed feelings I wrote my resignation and gave my four weeks notice with my last day being Friday 31st July. So I'm free for coffee and lunch any day after then! What does this mean you ask, it means that over this coming weekend I will be looking up flights and hope to leave around the 24th or 25th August.

For those of you who haven't heard our friend Fred who was on his way to Australia only made it as far as Singapore before he was turned back due to a suspected stolen passport. Even though the Australian authorities admitted it was their fault he was still returned home and more than likely not coming to visit us this time.

I hope you have a wonderful weekend,

Much love, Michele AKA Blackieonamission xo
